

Rolling hills, great soil conditions and a wide expanse of open farmland has made New Jersey an award-winning wine producing state. No matter where you live or drive within the Garden State, you are close to wine country! From the Skylands in Northern Sussex County to the tip of Cape May, six different wine trails await you with each winery along the way offering wine tastings, wine-friendly foods, live music and other entertainment, all designed to showcase the award-winning New Jersey wines being produced by the more than 50 wineries now operating throughout the state.

Wine-making is a serious business in New Jersey. It has become not only an elegant solution for preserving farmland acres – but has allowed New Jersey to annually be one of the top ten wine producing states. New Jersey wineries consistently garner medals for their wines at some of the leading international wine competitions in the country, all from grapes grown right here in New Jersey.

Our history as a wine-producing state dates back more than 200 years ago, when London's Royal Society of the Arts recognized two New Jersey wineries for successfully producing the first bottles of quality wines.

Renault Winery, the oldest commercial winery in New Jersey was established by French immigrant Louis Renault in 1864. Today, there are nearly 50 licensed wineries in New Jersey, offering not only nationally and internationally acclaimed wines – but a total wine experience.
