

Visit Historic Fort Worth's Cattle Baron Mansions

Stand where the Cattle Barons stood when livestock was king and ranching ruled the Southwest. Docent-Guided Tours - (817) 332-5875

For updates and closings please check www.historicfortworth.org

Wednesday, Thursday & Friday; 11:00, 12:00, 1:00 & 2:00 Sundays: 1:00, 2:00 & 3:00

Admission: $15.00 Adults (includes a tour of both properties)
$7.50 Children, 12 years of age and under
Group rates available for 20 or more. Groups by appointment only.

For the cattle barons who made their fortunes in the

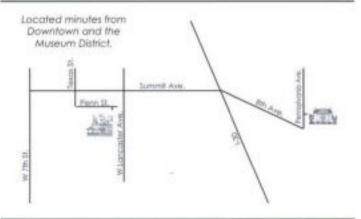

For the cattle barons who made their fortunes in the dawning of the 20th century, the ultimate sign of success was a grand mansion in Fort Worth, location of the largest livestock market in the southwest.

Ball-Eddleman-McFarland House (1899) – 1110 Penn Street The region's most intact Queen Anne residence boasts a sandstone-carved parch and copper-spired, slate roof. Elaborate interiors are so embellished with intricately patterned wood, stained glass and marble that the house has been called a jewel box.

Thistle Hill (1904) – 1509 Pennsylvania Avenue This commanding mansion, with a glistening green tile roof and massive limestone columns, was built by an heir of one of Texas' great ranching dynasties. The Georgian Revival mansion is filled with 19th and 20th century furnishings, and the expansive, manicured grounds feature an elegant tea house and a rare "transitional" carriage house, designed for both horses and autos.

Thistle Hill and McFarland House are Fort Worth's 1st and 2nd Local Landmarks, and are Recorded Texas Historic Landmarks that are listed in the National Register of Historic Places, Historic Fort Worth, Inc. is a 501(c)(3) non-profit corporation.

