BEYOND CHICKEN SOUP

Jews & Medicine in America

When Jewish Americans were denied access to medical care and shunned from medical schools based on religious affiliation, they built their own hospitals, trained their own doctors, and served not only their own community but also other minority groups in need of care, making significant contributions to the medical world and society as a whole.

This important exhibit features over 200 artifacts, photographs, and documents, including highlights from Cleveland's own Mt. Sinai Hospital.

Beyond Chicken Soup: Jews & Medicine in America was created by the Jewish Museum of Maryland with support from National Endowment from the Humanities and Institute of Museum and Library Services.
