create

Our educational programs stimulate a child's natural curiosity and creativity while building their academic, social and physical skills.

- Hands-on activities help children explore science, technology, engineering, math, culture, the arts, literacy, health and the environment.
- Design, tinker, collaborate and create something amazing in our makerspace.
- Sing, count and experiment in our preschool programs that promote early literacy, math and science concepts.
- Have fun while learning when you participate in our family-friendly workshops, programs and performances.

learn

The Museum's unique environment is designed to grow with your child, and offers new things to do, investigate and discover every step of the way!

Museum activities reflect national and state academic standards and developmental milestones recognized by the National Association for the Education of Young Children, ensuring that your child is learning as much as they are having fun!

explore

Exhibit galleries offer hands-on environments where children can follow their interests, try new things, solve problems and have fun working with others as they learn about the world around them.

- Discover the people, places and processes that make a community work and explore commerce during a visit to our pretend kid-sized business district.
- Step into a giant game board with activity stations and physical challenges that highlight ways to stay healthy through proper nutrition, regular exercise, safety and good personal care.
- Sort and build with hundreds of literacy tiles, play larger-than-life word games, listen to audio books, create a blog, and communicate with graphic design.
- Our pretend urban park is filled with sights, sounds and age-appropriate activities that help infants and toddlers build important school-readiness skills. Caregivers will find tips for maximizing learning while playing together and ways to support the ages and stages of a young child's development.
